Profile

With an interest to build things, when I got my first laptop at the age of 13 I started to look into building computer games, at that time I stumbled upon c++ and a framework called chilli. I started developing and haven't stopped since.

Facing a hard time extending the applications I build, I started to create ways and conventions on my programming, only to learn later that the things that I did with no prior knowledge, were industry standards.

Since then, I have extended my knowledge with platforms such as dotnet, angular, front end technologies, relational databases, and different design patterns.
